Information Sheet

The State Commission on Judicial Conduct is an independent judicial agency created and authorized under the Texas Constitution to investigate and prosecute allegations of judicial misconduct or disability filed against Texas judges. A judge commits judicial misconduct if he or she is found to have willfully or persistently violated one or more of the mandatory provisions found in the Texas Code of Judicial Conduct. A judge may also be disciplined for incompetence or for engaging in willful or persistent conduct that casts public discredit on the judiciary or on the proper administration of justice. In egregious cases of misconduct or disability, a judge may be suspended or removed from office.

The Commission has jurisdiction over all Texas judges, including appellate, district, associate, magistrate, constitutional county, statutory county and probate, justice of the peace and municipal court judges. Retired or former judges who consent to sit by assignment are also subject to Commission jurisdiction. Although all judicial candidates are required to comply with the Texas Code of Judicial Conduct, the Commission, cannot investigate or discipline a candidate who is not a judge at the time the alleged misconduct is said to have occurred. There is no statute of limitations barring the Commission from investigating or sanctioning a judge, even after he or she has left the bench, for misconduct that occurred during his or her term in office.

The Commission has no authority over federal judges, mediators, arbitrators, or administrative hearing officers.

The Commission has a 13-member board of judges, citizens, and attorneys appointed by the Supreme Court, the Governor, and the State Bar of Texas respectively. They are all volunteers, who serve six-year staggered terms. Many of the members are required by law to be from different areas of the state. The Commission meets approximately six times per year and disposes of approximately 1,000 cases or more every year. All complaints are reviewed, analyzed, investigated as appropriate, and presented to the Commission at a regularly scheduled meeting for its consideration and disposition.

Commission meetings are not open to the public, nor are they subject to state open meetings laws.

The Commission receives and processes thousands of writings each year, approximately 1,100 of which are opened and assigned a case number. Complaints sent by fax or email are not accepted, nor will oral complaints be taken over the telephone. The Commission has the authority to accept anonymous complaints as well as complaints from confidential sources. In some instances, reports from the media may lead to an investigation and disciplinary action against a judge.

Some complaints can be resolved more quickly than others. On average, most cases will be presented to the Commission within 4 to 6 months of filing. Depending on the number and complexity of issues presented, as well as the level of cooperation from witnesses and the respondent judge, some cases may take as much as 12 months or longer to resolve.

The Commission is not an appellate court. It cannot change or overturn the decision of any judge, remove a judge from presiding over a case, award relief or damages, issue fines, represent litigants, or give legal advice.

Access To Legal Materials

Judges have acknowledged that legal rights may be meaningless, unless the accused has full ability to enforce them. Inmates therefore have a "Right of Access" to the courts. To comply with this, Federal, State, and Local Prison Officials must provide pre-trial inmates with either an adequately stocked jail legal library or help from a paralegal. Prisons must also provide supplies necessary to file court documents.
